By bus

Bus 110 & Route B connect passengers from the airport to Wrzeszcz train station and the city centre 35-50min away. The fare is PLN3 if a ticket is bought from a news stand or Bilet shop, and PLN3.40 if the ticket is bought from the driver. Although the ticket has a picture of a tram on it, it is also valid for the bus. Make sure to get on in the right direction at the airport, because the bus goes in two directions from there. On the way to the airport, the bus picks up on the other side of the road, near the front of the Scandic hotel. From the tourist office in the tunnel, turn left, walk until you are outside and head right, go up the stairs, turn right, and the bus shelters will be in front of you.

Bus tickets table:

Single fare tickets:	full fare [PLN]	reduced fare [PLN]
1. Single journey on one bus or one tram only

You will find several rental car companies at the Gdansk's airport.

City Map

Gdansk

Location: 54.3806° N, 18.6583° E
Population: 456,874
Area: 262 km²

History:

A thousand-year history, a location at the crossroads of important commercial and communication routes, an extensive port and mercantile traditions - all this makes Gdansk a meeting place of many cultures, nationalities and denominations. The first written mention of Gdansk comes from 997. The defensive and urban complex as well as a port started to really form in the second half of the 10th century. The dynamic development of trade, fishery and craft guilds soon pushed the city to the leading position in Pomerania. It maintained this even despite being taken over by the Teutonic Knights in 1308. The city continued to develop dynamically. Joining the League of Hanseatic Cities (in 1361) and the fast development of the port are just some of the factors contributing to the strong position of Gdansk in Europe. Although after the defeat of the Teutonic Order near Grunwald the city voted for the Polish king, it did not return to Poland until 1457 when King Kazimierz Jagiellonczyk incorporated Gdansk into the Crown and, in recognition of the merits of Gdansk burghers, granted Gdansk numerous privileges, thus starting a three-hundred-year period of prosperity. The following years are traditionally called the "golden age." During this time Gdansk was one of the wealthiest and most significant cities in Europe. The religious freedom gained in the 16th century turned the city into a true melting pot of nationalities and denominations, giving it yet another stimulus for development, thanks to the specific "community of differences." It was one of the few such places in the world at the time. This prosperity was checked by the Swedish wars and partitions of Poland in the 18th century. The city was cut off from Poland and in 1793 it was annexed to Prussia. What followed was a period of slow decline; the gloomiest in its history, interrupted but for a while by the Napoleonic wars. In 1919, the Free City of Gdansk was established under the Treaty of Versailles, which brought the city back to the elite of European ports. Unfortunately, in 1933 Nazis took power and fascist terror started to escalate in the city. On 1 September 1939, at around 4.30 in the morning, it was here, in Gdansk, that the Second World War started with shots fired from the battleship Schleswig-Holstein. It was a time of bravery and martyrdom of its citizens. The heroic fighting in Westerplatte and the martyrdom of the defenders of the Polish Post Office opened a new, tragic chapter in the history of Gdansk. The war and the particularly fierce struggle for liberation left Gdansk completely devastated. Its reconstruction, with the help of fully dedicated citizens, took several dozen years. Gdansk once again became the biggest Baltic port and regained its former splendor. Once again it drew the attention of the whole world, becoming a synonym for the liberation aspirations of Poles. The tragic December 1970, and then August 1980 and the martial law period are the successive dates symbolizing the fight of the citizens of Gdansk against the prevailing communist regime. It was Gdansk that became the cradle of "Solidarno" which was to transform the then map of Europe. History has come full circle. Contemporary Gdansk - a half-a-million, dynamically developing agglomeration - is vibrant with life as before and again deserves to be called "the Pearl of the North."

Currency

Changing money is increasingly less fretful to do, but as with most international destinations it is still worth keeping checking rates particularly at entry points such as airports or in major tourist areas. Euro 1 = 4.1563zł, US $1 = 3.0548zł, GBP 1 = 4.9944zł.

Amber Museum

Housed in Gdańsk's mediaeval Fore-gate building (once home to the Prison Tower and Torture Chamber), this multi-story exhibit delves extensively into the history of Baltic amber. The impressive collection of "inclusions" (when bugs or plants are caught inside the amber) is intriguing to look at, and the many amber creations, from inkwells to spoons to a stunning Fender Stratocaster guitar, shows the material's diversity. A large open room at the top of the building houses an impressive array of modern amber jewellery that appears more artistic than wearable. Many find the separate exhibits on the building's past as a torture chamber uncomfortable – and considering the piped-in soundtrack of pained cries, we understand why – but they are a must-see, if for no other reason to find out what "thumb screwing" and a "heretic's fork" are. Many of the exhibit rooms throughout the ancient building are small and cramped, and if you happen to visit on the same day as a school group it's a nightmare. There is also a viewing point (admission 5zł) open during the high season.

Address: Targ Węglowy 26

Archaeological Museum

It might seem strange to find a large archaeological exhibit on the Sudan in the heart of Gdansk, faux tribal huts and all, but go with it. The next floors cover the history of the area, complete with exhumed skeletons, an ancient canoe and plenty of interesting jewellery that has been liberated from the ground. More interesting than the Ice Age weaponry, Stone Age drawings and amber displays are the models of the city in the past and the detritus collected after Gdansk was shattered in World War II. With the opening of more and more modern and visitor friendly museums in recent years this is both an academic way to spend an hour of your afternoon and a chance to see what all Polish museums were once like.

Copernicus Museum

Nicolaus Copernicus, better known as the man who shocked the world with his theory the world revolved around the sun, spent much of his life working from his observatory in nearby Frombork. However Copernicus (or rather Mikolaj Kopernik – he would start to use the name Nicolaus Copernicus in university) had family in Gdansk all his life. It is believed that at some point Copernicus took co-guardianship of some orphaned relatives. The other co-guardian was a Dutch merchant Arend van der Schilling, the father of Anne, a beautiful woman by all accounts and much younger than Nicolaus.

European Solidarity Centre

The huge construction you can see next to the entrance to the Gdansk Shipyards is the new European Solidarity Centre which is due to open in the late summer of 2014. The 5-storey building which has been designed to give the impression of walls cracking and tilting and is covered in rust-coloured sheet metal reminiscent of a ship's hull, has been a project in the making for many years. It was finally signed into life in 2005 on the 25th anniversary of the signing of the August Accords when a Founding Act was signed in Solidarity Square by 29 joint-signatories including EU Commission chief Juan Manuel Barroso, Polish President Aleksander Kwasniewski and Lech Walesa. Construction began in 2011 and is now nearing completion.

Roads to Freedom

The Roads to Freedom exhibition is a place that should feature highly on every visitor's itinerary. Charting the course of events from 1945 till 1989, this subterranean exhibition does an excellent job of explaining the meteoric rise and subsequent consequences of the Solidarity phenomena. The exhibition kicks off by launching the visitor into the world of the average Pole circa late 1970's – staring you in the eye is a diorama depicting a typical grocery store, it's shelves empty but for a thin spread of vinegar and mustard: practically the only goods which weren't in scant supply.

Dinning in Gdansk

Polish cuisine is a style of cooking and food preparation originating in or widely popular in Poland. Polish cuisine has evolved over the centuries to become very eclectic due to Poland's history. Polish cuisine shares many similarities with other Central European cuisines, especially German, Austrian and Hungarian cuisines, as well as Belarussian, Ukrainian, Russian, French and Italian culinary traditions. It is rich in meat, especially pork, chicken and beef (depending on the region) and winter vegetables and spices. It is also characteristic in its use of various kinds of noodles the most notable of which are kluski as well as cereals such as kasha (from the Polish word kasza). Generally speaking, Polish cuisine is hearty and uses a lot of cream and eggs. The traditional dishes are often demanding in preparation. Many Poles allow themselves a generous amount of time to serve and enjoy their festive meals, especially Christmas Eve dinner (Wigilia) or Easter breakfast which could take a number of days to prepare in their entirety.

Kubicki

Kubicki is the oldest restaurant in Gdańsk. In the interwar period, then called Kubicki Cafe International, the restaurant functioned as a night café and it was one of the trendiest places at that time in Gdańsk. Kubicki Restaurant still receives wide recognition not only among the residents of Gdańsk, but also among the visitors from all over the world. Exquisite cuisine, unique atmosphere enriched with performances of piano singers are undeniable reasons why this place is worth visiting. This is one of the last places where the spirit of This City has been preserved.

Ploy

Ploy means ‘gem’ in Thai. We were inspired by the true gems of Japanese and Thai cuisine – the interplay of sweet, sour, salty, spicy and umami flavours; the meticulous preparation of dishes using only the freshest ingredients. By applying these tenets of asian cooking to not-so-asian dishes, we created a new modern asian cuisine. Come ‘ploy’ with us and be dazzled.
